

Jagoda Stachowicz

Zespół Aspergera a kompetencje społeczne

SUMMARY

The Asperger's Syndrome in context of social competence

Every day someone is informed that he has autism or Asperger's Syndrome (AS). Around the world number of people with disfunctions of central nervous systems is more and more. For this reason I decided to develop autism's topic. Majority of scientists think that AS belongs to autism's spectrum (other name: highly functioning autism).

Etiologie of the disease remains still unclear but most sure theory maintains that the source of it is dysfunction of specific brain structures.

In the article I focus on social competences of patient with AS, because this field is disturbed particularly. In last time the attitude to this disturbance is changed. In schools, various work –places and universities, the specialists try to widen knowledge of people about AS. Children with this indisposition are led to integrate school. Teachers, educators, psychologists and therapists teach the rest of healthy pupils how to behave and treat the colleagues with AS.

In the first chapter I describe characteristic of AS, its definitions, origin, reasons of the appearance and specific features. In the second chapter I wrote about meaning of social competence and in the last chapter I focus on range of social competence among people with AS. Furthermore I show the ways of the competence's development and work with society. AS is incurable but honest and incessant therapy can cause that the symptoms will be milder.

The new trend in a treatment AS creates the real chances for childrens with AS. Because of their amazing ability in various fields and specific perception of word they are unique.